“ Hey Brendan! I've always been in a rush. Two months early and everything else. Thank you for teaching me to get out of Indianapolis sometimes. Lol! I'm so happy that you had wonderful experiences in life. I remember how much you loved Christmas. I remember how much you loved... Thank you for being you! Thank you for being my son and friend. You're the best Brendan Sr. I've ever known. I believe that you and Brenae watch out for each other. Peace and Love!

“ Thank you, Brendan, for being my eldest son, helping me to be better because you were with me, pushing me to higher challenges and better living experiences, and to never give up, like what I'd always told you. Thank you for remembering what I taught you and incorporating those techniques in your lifestyle. You always moved a bit faster than I, causing me to step aside allowing you to be your best you. Thank you for helping me to release you spiritually so that you could be with God. You said that my prayers were keeping you here. You said that you wouldn't leave until I released you. You said that you tried, but it's too hard. You said that you were tired. You said that you didn't want me to be disappointed. You said, "Mom, release me." I said, after a couple of minutes, realizing that you must have been in great discomfort because you never said anything like that before. You overcame any situation to the best of your ability. I also realized that releasing you meant that you wanted to be with God. Because coming back, you would be in the same body, and, God's presence is better. Thank you for considering me. Thank you for letting me know that my prayers were keeping you here. That was beautiful! The way you and God orchestrated the message was awesome! Truly! So, I said, since you want me to Brendan, I release in in the name if Jesus. About ten minutes later. I received a call that you had transitioned. Thank you for sharing that experience. I never knew it was possible. Peace in the spirit! I love you.

Brendan, I miss you so much in the natural. Your spirit comforts me. Yielding has been a challenge. First with Brenae and now you. I'm trusting God every step of the way. Knowing that you and Brenae are okay and are with God, and, knowing that you can be with me and anyone you choose to check on us is remarkable. I'm going to be able to sense when you and Brenae are with me. For that, I thank you. Peace, love and joy to you, Brenae and other loved ones. Thank you for being my dear Brendan, my first born.

Brendan, I'm getting better now more and more. I've asked God to take the grief away. I decided to buy something for myself. It had to be on clearance and five dollars. I didn't find anything for that price. But, I saw a color that I liked, and it was a t-shirt. It was marked down to 7 dollars. I put it back on the rack. I picked it up again. The writing was in Spanish. I thought and put it back again. I really liked it, and I had been doing so well, I decided to buy it. It rang up for three dollars and change. That was a miracle! You know how I shop. Lol! Weeks later, I decided to find the definition/meaning of the Spanish words. It means, no more grieving mom. Thank you! That helped a lot! Peace and love!
